Before We Begin

You've been given something meaningful — not just a film, but a way to hold on to your story.

A Legacy Film is a guided storytelling experience — part conversation, part reflection. It's relaxed, personal, and filmed with care so your voice, memories, and personality can be preserved for the people who love you most.

This isn't about performance or perfection. It's about the real, everyday stories that make you who you are — the laughter, lessons, and small moments that matter most.

When it's finished, you'll have a film that feels like you — honest, timeless, and made to be revisited for generations.

Legacy Portrait

What's ahead

Your Legacy Film session will capture shared stories and connection — the kind that happen when people who love each other sit down and start remembering.

You'll have about two hours together to laugh, reflect, and tell your stories as a pair or small group — maybe a couple, siblings, or parent and grown children.

Choose a space that feels personal — a home filled with photos, a favorite spot outdoors, or somewhere that represents your story. Bring a few old pictures or mementos to spark conversation — we can weave them into the film later.

This is about remembering together — a time to talk about what you've built, what you've learned, and what you want to leave behind.

The moments you've shared, told in your own voices.

Getting Ready

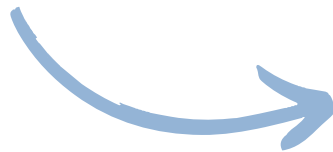

You don't need to rehearse or write anything down. The best stories come out naturally once you start remembering.

Think about the moments that shaped you — the people who made a difference, the memories that still make you laugh, the lessons you want to pass on.

Choose a space that feels comfortable and familiar — your home, your porch, a favorite chair. You can bring old photos, letters, or mementos if they help spark memories.

Most of all, come ready to talk, reflect, and be yourself. I'll guide you through the rest.
